To The Public Service Commission Clerk:

The parent company of FPL is NextEra Energy, which has business interests outside of Florida. For instance, it is "the biggest owner of renewable generation in the US" per a recent article in the Wall Street Journal about renewable energy.

This means that some of NextEra's income is going to support the creation of power for energy consumers elsewhere in the United States.

I realize that some of the monies that FPL customers are paying to the company are being used to bring us affordable, reliable, and clean energy. ( As we are constantly reminded in our bill insert)

However, I wonder if some of the profits from FPL's service is going into NextEra's other business interests? Why should Floridians help support the delivery of power in California? NextEra is an investor in Eagle Crest Energy company, which is involved in a pumped storage project in Palm Springs, CA.

Taking into the fact the already ample shareholder's return on equity, and the investments of NextEra outside of the State of Florida, I certainly am opposed to the Public Service Commission granting the requested $1.34 billion increase in base rates.

Thank you for your attention and consideration.
