Public Service Commission
State of Florida

Mr. Commissioner,

I have been involved in construction operations in South Florida for more than 37 years. I have worked only in the private sector only. In these years I have learned that not shielding contractors from their bad decisions and bad actions only tends to promote further degradation of the contractor pool.

Recently I see Florida Power and Light pleading to your commission for hurricane compensation due to they're faulty ownership decision, over the decades, not to invest in underground utility installations. Failure to invest wisely is a owner choice, not one the consumers ever had a choice to opt-in or out of.

As I understand your commission is responsible to the State of Florida and not to support this contractor and it's ownership for their taking increased profits instead of investing in THEIR distribution system, which the citizens don't even own.

Now I see further pleading to your PSC to be compensated for yet another bad FPL corporate decision: the faulty engineering aspects involving the Turkey Point nuclear generating facility. Again this contractor expects the PSC cover their engineering mistakes in the design and materials used. This should not be acceptable. The ownership of FPL have the vast income of many investments they have made with the profits from Florida consumers. They can easily write off this mistakes and not make citizens pay thru the PSC.

Sir, it is time for this company to be financially responsible to the citizens of Florida. Just like teaching a child about bad choices it's time you and the PSC be the adult in the room with this very for-profit company.
